

The FCC has no place trying to regulate a private subscriber only broadcast medium such as xm radio. Other mediums such as local broadcast radio and broadcast TV do need regulation because they are free and available to everyone. XM is not, it's users pay for it's services and if they feel that it is not appropriate than they can simply cancel their membership. I personally cannot think of anyone who would be offended or disturbed by the presence of traffic and weather reports on their paid subscription to a satalite radio company. Other than the satalite radio's competition of course. Trying to limit this medium would not only be against the 1st ammendments freedom of speech, but also a step towards reducing competition for the large media corporations and reflects as if the government is trying to turn these corporations into monopolies.
